[[Fig.]] Figs. 3 and 5 schematically shows a third embodiment of the present invention. In this embodiment a data source 100 provides data (step 500) by wirelessly transmitting 110 (step 501) to any mobile phones 10 in the vicinity (step 502). For example, the data source may transmit data on very short range radio transmission. Any mobile phone 10 which happens to be passing by will receive the transmitted data. This data may be stored (step 503) for later transmission (step 504), as discussed above with respect to first and second embodiments, for example when a call is made or received by the mobile phone 10. Alternatively, the mobile phone may immediately transmit the data. In either case, the data is transmitted to base station 20, and then over a telephone network 30 to a central database 40 for access by a user 50. It will be necessary to identify the data source 100 in some way. For example, this may be by including an identifier in the data transmitted by the data source 100 via the mobile phone 10 to the central database 40, or the mobile phone may add location data (if it has location-aware circuitry) to the received data, and the location data can be used to identify the data source.
